Over the summer holiday, Spencer went to a family camp with his parents. These events unfolded at the family camp.

To begin with, there were a variety of activities for the visitors to join, which were shown on the noticeboard. When Spencer's parents were looking at the posters, a boy with a cap came in with his parents. The boy was very excited when he saw the horse-riding class.

Then, Spencer approached the boy in a friendly manner and asked him if her would like to join the horse-riding class together. The boy showed his interest.

Soon, the two boys started to chat with each other. Through the conversation, Spencer learned that the boy was called David, and he had ridden a horse once when he was four years old. He said that was an exciting experience.

Eventually, with the coaches' guidance an encouragement, Spencer and David were able to handle the horse-riding skills very well. Both families had lots of fun at the family camp, they promised to do it again. After the horse-riding class, Spencer and David went to buy ice cream to cool off. They felt refreshed after finishing their ice cream.
